Rumble in the Jungle
Fighting for Freedom in West Papua

This interview with a representative of the OPM took place in a mystery location in a well-known South Coast seaside resort (not the one you’re thinking of), with an inept interviewer, a cheap tape recorder, and drunks singing a rousing chorus of ‘Rawhide’ in the background.

West Papua, the western half of the island of New Guinea is home to rich rainforest and a huge range of different tribal groups—accounting for 0.1% of the world’s population, but speaking up to 25% of all known languages. In 1963, this former Dutch colony was annexed by Indonesia and became the province of Irian Jaya. In 1969, a fraudulent referendum involving 1025 indigenous people—the ‘Act of Free Choice’—ratified the Indonesian occupation. To maintain its control over West Papua’s immense natural resources—including some of the world’s best mineral deposits—Indonesia has unleashed one of the least-known genocides of the 20th century.

Massacres, rape, torture, disappearances, the seizure of land and cultural assimilation policies have been commonplace, with perhaps a sixth of the 1963 population (300,000 people) killed since the occupation began.

Indonesia’s policy of ‘transmigration’—relocating millions of people from heavily populated Java, Bali and Madura to the outer islands, to consolidate their grip on them—has also done tremendous damage. But almost from the very start, this catalogue of abuses has been met with determined and inspiring resistance, against incredible odds, from the Organisasi Papua Merdeka (OPM) or Free Papua Movement.

DOD: Can you describe how Indonesia took control in West Papua from 1963?
OPM: My father was included in that process. Because he is one of the people who had contact with outside people (such as missionaries) when Indonesia came and asked for people who give access to us, they said ‘Oh, this is one of them’, they included my father there were 1,025 people.

This was for the Act of Free Choice, as they call it...

Yes, this is the story of my father himself. They selected those people based on who they wanted, and they trained them in some Indonesian sentences, like ‘I agree with Indonesia’ or ‘I want Indonesia. I don’t want the Dutch’—at least 5 or 6 sentences. My father didn’t know the meaning of these sentences. After some weeks, they tested who was doing good in those sentences and my father passed the test, and he was asked to say one of those whole sentences in a meeting.
So the process was basically a complete joke, would you say?
Yes. My father is now feeling very, very sorry. He is saying 'Don’t repeat my mistake anymore.' At the time, they were saying that Indonesia was coming to help, supporting independence.
Right, so they didn’t realise that they would actually be taken over as part of Indonesia?
Actually they realised later. And all of the 1.025 are now against Indonesia. When I am here, they are now protesting. They are standing and they say ‘I signed these and now I want to pay it back.’
Did anyone realise that the US was very much behind the Indonesians and was pressuring the UN to hand West Papua over to the Indonesians?
We didn’t realise. But now me and the others are learning, we realise that during the Cold War the US wanted to control the Pacific area.

Traditional Tribal Culture

How would you describe traditional West Papuan cultures? For example, the relationship between the tribes and the land has been described as the people and the land ‘owning’ one another: Compared, say, to what you find here in England, what sort of things define West Papuan society?
That’s something I have been talking about. There are many things based on my view that are missing here, like we value the collective way of life. We stay in one house or one building, we know each other by names, by background, we greet each morning, we greet: ‘Where are you going?’ You don’t do that here. First time I come here and I was greeting people, they seemed negative, and I smile to people and feel ‘Who are you?’. And it is different.

What sort of relationship is there between the tribes and the land that they exist upon?
That’s one of the things I am missing here. I first came to a big city for a few months, then went to one of the villages over there, and then after a few more months I came here. It is not my way moving every couple of months, because my habit is getting settled in one place, get to know the trees, whatever I have in the nature, and they know me and I know them, even the animals, whatever around my life. And when I was in the city, I couldn’t do that because I must move, and we don’t have any relation with others, that’s what I feel here. But in my place you can see that people are so tied to their land...

Because the ancestors are in the land too and that’s a connection going back hundreds or thousands of years?
And we feel that we can talk to the land. Many people here don’t understand me, but we do. Like plants, like weather—I can say for example ‘Rains’, if rain comes, and I can say ‘Stop, I’m going to do this’ and they obey. Maybe I’m magic or whatever, people may suspect, but it is just normal because I understand them and they understand me.

How has the Indonesian domination affected traditional West Papuan cultures—for example Operation Gotek (1970s) attempt to get Papuans to dress properly?—the word is an insulting term for the penis worn by Dani tribesmen. An Indonesian foreign minister said that they were determined to “get them down from the trees even if we have to pull them down!”, he punishments for raising the West Papuan Morning Star flag, the teaching of the Pancasila (Indonesian’s ‘national ideology’), and throwing people off the land and so breaking that connection they have with the land?
Really really massive, and it is the suffering I think, where we have been suffering very much.

What sort of form does this take?
I am writing a book on this topic, to tell my people this is what’s happening in our culture with the Christian Church. I don’t mean that religion is wrong, but the Church itself—it has its own culture—and they break up our own culture, the social structure. They have their own clergy men who say: ‘Don’t listen to the tribal leader about this—this is the correct way’, and that means they destroy our life, which was for whole decades, for generations. This means that we suffer for we do not know how to step from that to this.

So you are almost caught between two worlds?
Two worlds, yes. We are confused, we become victims of this change. We are not well informed in what to do... And the second is the government; they have their own cultural structure that they are imposing on us. They have governors, they have everything—until the village level, where they also impose their own rules. They have programs like family planning, transmigration, translocation: if someone’s against it, they must be punished, and they have laws, regulations, and it breaks up everything which was existing in the past. Indonesia has a policy of uniting the diversity; everybody’s Indonesian and everybody must move to the national language, behave like Indonesian people and don’t say anything which distinguishes you from the others.

Which is a bit difficult because there are an awful lot of cultures in West Papua, and there’s even more different cultures across the whole Indonesian archipelago.
It’s logically impossible, but they are forcing it. Everybody feels that they are killing us in the long run, these tranquility programs... We believe that when people take our lands, or exploit our lands, or move us, that is like taking plants and seeds from my land to here and saying: ‘it can grow here because this is land, this is soil, this country has soil and that country has soil, so we can just plant here—it is impossible. It means we are killing it, even though the plant is still alive; so it is with moving people from one village to another one land to the other. Like the way in which lots of Papuan people have been relocated from, say, the Central Highlands to the Lowlands, and they don’t have the resistance to the malaria you find in the Lowlands. They know how to live in the Highlands.

But not on the coast! We suffer much. People from the coast, they know and they don’t have any serious malarial disease. You go there and you can see that many people are in the hospital—they are from the Highlands. The many troubles are with the Highlanders, with those who are moved from one place to another. Even the Javanese, they have many, many troubles.

With transmigration, hundreds of thousands of people have been brought over to West Papua and to the other islands such as Sulawesi or Sumatra, and in some cases it might have worked, but in many cases it’s almost like they’ve been dumped in that area. In your experience are the transmigrants doing badly or well?
The transmigrants and us, we are just victims of those policymakers, they can also be suffering, but they don’t know how to claim or who to blame. I have been with transmigrants for about 3 years, visiting them when I was studying at the university, and they were expressing their concern: ‘We miss our lands and our cities and this is a different land. They were thinking West Papua was good for them, but it is here where the land is different, and how they cultivate the rice.

Do they still try to cultivate it as they did in Java?
They tried but they are failing—because even though they have large lands, they don’t produce as they produce in Java. Some of them sell their lands and leave the islands.
Is it true that when you clear the jungle the soil itself is quite poor; so it doesn’t work when it is cleared in transmigration projects, say for the oil palm plantations, but the way Papuans have done it does work because you are still keeping most of the forest cover instead of clearing a huge area?
I would say that we have our own way, which is better, it can cause cultural habit... We know how to balance the ecosystem, because we know very well what will happen—without any scientific knowledge we know how to balance it. In my culture we only cut the trees and make gardens in a special place. We don’t hunt there, we know where to farm and where not to farm. You cannot hunt every single year, but we have regulations saying that this is the month of the day you can hunt. These regulations come from our culture. We have people in power to say ‘Now you can go and hunt’, and if we plant crops, ‘Now you can take your crops or not’. I cannot say ‘This is my plant and I want to take it’—in my culture I must wait for instructions to take it. But it doesn’t work now. Government officials or the Army come and want to take it—just take it... This is my power I can take whatever I want... and this is breaking up our culture. We told the tribal leaders that what we have already is good. Because the modern life is attractive to some groups? It holds lots of promise for them?
Yes. We were thinking that influences from outside are good, but now from here I see that no, we were better of than now—many things are missing here—like relations with the people, relations with the nature, with the animals. I cannot find them here.

Impact of the Indonesian Occupation

This, I don’t know, may be a bit painful, but in the last few years we’ve heard a lot about the genocide perpetrated against East Timor—perhaps a third of the population killed. Have the people of West Papua experienced similar horrific treatment at the hands of the Indonesians?
I myself was in some of the wars, not fighting, but when I was a child. And I saw myself, people were killed. I think compared to East Timor West Papua is their own rate of geographical and worse?! Unclear, because the large numbers, the numbers of people killed, and the treatment is worse, and also it is never exposed because of the isolation—few people can speak English or get access to the outside outside by the road from the Baliem Valley at least no one else.
And the Baliem Valley is a massive area...? Biggest tribe in the island. We have been isolated for so long.
I am almost surprised to hear you say, and with such certainty, that it's worse than East Timor. Just for me, sitting here, it's so far out of my experience that it's hard to imagine in what way anybody could consider even worse treatment than the East Timorese.

Like, in my place, one village that was against the Indonesians, they finished the whole village, completely bombed and killed everybody, and no one knows because it is just one valley. We live in a town that's divided into one valley to another we don't know each other. So we don't know what's happening in the other tribe, and they can just easily finish, and no one will come against—compared to East Timor which is just a small island, people know what's happening in their village, it's just closer to the outside world...

Because East Timor has a stronger national society than in small tribes? And also they have more people educated. They have been with Portugal for 400 years, where West Papua now, we just had contact with in the 1940s and 1950s—[in Highlands, ’60s]. So we don't know how to open our cases. (Pause.) I saw myself how people were cut into pieces. I saw myself, when I was seven years old. I went with my uncle, my uncle brought me on his shoulders, and they took me down and they cut him in front of my eyes, you see...

What had he done, how come they did nothing...? Because he had a moustache and they were thinking your hair should be cut short and you must clean this. You must be tidy in your clothes, if not, you will be questioned. There is a certain way you must have your hair, how to put on your clothes. If this is not the way they want then you are rebellious. So that's really treating you like your children, basically.

Yes! Sure. (Laughs.) The East Timorese, they have knowledge to oppose what's happening in Indonesia, but we don't know. We can't do anything because we are too weak.

I wanted to try and give people an idea of the natural beauty in West Papua. It seems a remarkably beautiful and rich place—the jungles and mangrove swamps and the mountains, the birds of paradise, the tree kangaos, the cassowaries and so on. Can you give people a sense of what this is like and what's being lost as a result of what's going on?

We have, compared to what I am seeing here, like, many trees, you can see, I don't have any words to describe it, it is natural. We can see birds singing—yes, I can see birds singing here, but not so many. Many many birds, and plants—people are asking me here 'See this bush', but no, no, this is not bush, this is not natural. I don't have any words, but it is really something I have told people that this is a modifed world—like food and everything is made modified, this is already modified, and my world is the real world. (Laughs.) So even though the villages would be going their gardens and so on, it's still a very wild landscape. If you were to go to some village now what would you see around you?

Many creatures—particularly in the morning and in the afternoon. Many birds are going to their nests and going out from their nests, and we have special places where we go, for ourselves, when we have finished completing some serious meetings [sounds familiar!], and we go there just to watch the birds coming in... we know the places where birds go... and it is different. I am here and it is stressful. And I want to go back quickly. People think I would stay here as this is the modern world, but for me personally I think most of my people at least would agree, my life is more related to the nature, not with this (laughs) kind of world. We know the characteristics of different species from our ancestors, for example that this is an important tree. This is passed on through the story holder. My father is one of the story holders. And they tell stories, and we know where we can go and where we cannot go.

Why can you go to one place but not to another? We believe in spirits, you know so there are some places where we can have trouble but there are some places that are safe, and to my forest other people cannot go, because that's my forest, my spirit is there and I have my power authority on my own land—and if someone else goes there, he will get lost or get trouble, whatever.

And the Indonesians and transmigrants just don't fit into this at all—they seem totally alien? I said strong word—'I said killing us', even though they won't say that they will say we are helping you—but I do think they realise they are killing us. What sort of environmental impact has the Indonesian occupation had—like the logging, the oil palm plantations, the Trans-Irian Highway [built along the border with Papua New Guinea, and made accessible via the Lolat River extraction], the Manambero Dam and so on. Does this make it difficult to carry on the original way of life if the forest is going, and the animals are being chased away?

That's right. We feel that these policies are hurting us and we are fighting back. Actually the basic idea was to preserve the life—it is our life that we want to preserve. We don't want any policy which comes from outside and changes everything. All people are working to defend the culture, the survival of the people, and they mostly fight with the companies—they kidnapped some of the logging companies. Then they took hostage people who were with the World Wildlife Fund because they thought they were from the mining company: that they had sent these people to do surveys, to expand the mining activities. And they said 'We don't want it—it's something we are fighting against, we are fighting to close this mining company.' After that they realise that this is not someone here to exploit this land, but that they want to preserve the land, and they say 'Oh no, there is something wrong here', but it has already happened.

When they do that sort of thing against, say representatives of Freeport [the biggest mining company involved in West Papua] does it have the desired effect; does it get them to actually change their ways?

Yes, that's a big problem now because we are defending our traditional ways. In West Papua we have two kinds of communities—one is called kingdom, like here, we have small kingdoms, where people listen to one king and it is inherited by his children or brother But there are also people who live in different people families—meaning that we live like the military, under strong discipline. And we choose our people for leadership and their command because of their skill in fighting. The kingdom is inherited, but the military is elected. And in these military tribes, they are fighting in their own way—and we don't speak. We just fight better in this modern world. We are just fighting back traditionally for this is our way to disagree. In my culture, to disagree is to fight; that's what I can do, because that's what I know. And people here from this world say that this is guerrilla fighters, terrorist groups or whatever; from here, I can see myself in that situation. And that is a good lesson I am learning. That's our only way—fighting—our way of disagreeing things. Not the way that this world wants or approves.

Presumably that means that in fighting the traditional way you are often fighting with the traditional tools, like spears and bows and arrows, is that right?

Yes. So you're up against the Indonesian Army...

Yes (Laughs). With its helicopters, and guns, and...

Jet fighters (Laugh). And all sorts. Although it sounds like the OPM experiences a remarkable amount of success considering how the odds are stacked against them; and it seems like that is partly because they know the terrain so well, they know the land, and it is very difficult to track people down in the jungle. And also we know how to manipulate—we can work with the land, with nature. We can ask rain to come, it is easy and we can ask the landlords, I mean, the spirits...

The landlords? Not these sort of landlords, here in the pub? Not this kind here. (Laughs) No! No! The landlords tell them, send them back to their own camps, and they will do it, they can't find us. I can just walk around the village...

In English, we might say that it ‘bewilders’ them. Yes. They don't know where to go and they get lost, each time we are just watching them. So you're saying you are almost invisible to them. Invisible. Because we are with our nature. They know us and we know them, and the nature, and they will help us, for we help them.
The Indonesians stand out, but you don't. You blend into it.

Yes.

Freeport and Grasberg—Multinational mining scum in action
What is your impression of the role of foreign companies, because obviously this is very relevant to people in the UK, where a lot of these companies are based. The example that springs to mind immediately is the mining, particularly the Grasberg mine operated by Freeport [The world’s richest gold mine, and the third biggest copper mine]. Grasberg seems very similar to RTZ’s Panguna mine [see “A Tragedy on Bougainville” in DoD No 5] in that Indonesia gets an awful lot of rev—–from it, as Papua New Guinea does from Bougainville. I was wondering, what is the significance of Freeport, and since 1995, RTZ? [now working with Freeport a Grasberg in a mammoth joint venture.]

In particular Freeport has had a long history, even before West Papua came to be. Indonesians need help in this case to find out what really happens between the Indonesian and the Dutch and why we think there is a vested interest. And they didn’t care about the people, and they didn’t care about the environment, they only cared about what they benefit. Like in the Act Free Choice, no UN representatives were allowed to enter West Papua because Indonesia said ‘it’s risky, you won’t go’. But while at the same time, Freeport people were operating, and this is a question mark.

Am I right in thinking that Freeport were very close to Subarto [evil murdering bastard, recently deposed as Indonesian dictator—shame he didn’t get the Ceausescu treatment as well? Yes—Subarto was the commander-in-chief in taking West Papua into Indonesia... There’s a lot of money changing hands in all of this. Today we have the Dutch Amro Bank—it has shares in Grasberg. I think it is helping Freeport to develop the new contract now the second contract. For the extension of another 50 years of exploration. RTZ are also involved. Then there are the Korean logging companies. And most of the logging companies belong to Subarto. He was involved in West Papua through his infamous timber baron cronny Bob Hasian. And they belong to the Army as well. So, in the logging camps, there is the army.

They army doing the logging work? Yes. So people like the Forest Department cannot do anything because they are civil servants. We are Army and we are bringing this, so you cannot say anything, you cannot ask for a letter, permission, or whatever...

So that’s just pure corruption.

Meanwhile, we what affects the us what has on the local people are five tribes around the mining area. They are moved here—we say translocated, which is just the same as transmigraton. In particular the Amungme has the land where Freeport is called ‘Tembagapura town’ [Freeport’s ‘company town’] is where the people come from, where live. They are crying, shouting, speaking out, lling stories about how they relate to that mountain, that land, that this is what you are doing, this is what you are destroying in this way. People die and suffer from diseases because their world has changed, psychologically actually they suffer. There are many psychological problems that have never been cured up to now.

Because they’ve been wrenched away, if you like. Yes.

Isn’t one of the OPM leaders from that area originally—what’s his name? Yes, Kelly Kwiaki, who took the WWF hostages, he was from the Tembagapura—no.

And he’s taken actions against the mine, because he comes from there... It’s gold as well as a copper mine—probably that means you get a lot of pollution from the mine itself, like mercury and so on. Is the quality of the rivers suffering as a result, as has happened on the Amazon, and people are less able to use it?

Yes, it’s true. Culturally we don’t boil water to drink, we drink straight—like in the Amazon, we know what river we can drink directly, and some of those are polluted now; and we also fish on the rivers. In 1990, in the mid-80s, there were people dying because of drinking the water. They didn’t know they hadn’t experienced this before. They were just crossing the river, and they thought, they died. And it was in the local newspaper but nothing happened afterwards, no response from the government over it.

So no clean up. No. If you go to Freeport, before you land you can see the waste of the company—rivers come down amidst dirt, dirt river, because of the waste running off it, and you can see many plants dry out and you almost cannot see any living plants. And it’s dry. Hectares of... you can see a big strip of destruction alongside the river from the airplane.

If the spirits are in the land, how is it viewed in the traditional beliefs if a huge great crater is being dug out of the land? They especially the tribal leaders, they cry, just like children, you know, because they feel that they are being killed. We have houses for men where we gather together and we talk, we discuss, and the elders tell stories: ‘this is actually what it should be, now it’s changing’, and they cry. By that way they tell the younger generation what is happening. Like my father tells stories—and they give us advice, ‘do this, don’t do this’, and when they tell these stories, they cry. But that’s what they can do, they can’t do anything else. (Pause.) The reason the government gives is that it is going to help you, develop you—because you are primitive, left-behind.

Assuming that people wanted jobs in the mine anyway, is it not true that very few of them go to West Papuans? It’s mainly a thing for foreigners or Indonesians?

True. I can say only 20% are West Papuans working there.

And what sort of jobs are they doing?

This 20% are only going underground—not sitting in the office.

Right, they’re doing the dirty work. Yet get this, I can say only one person from the tribes is working, sitting in front of a computer in the office, with a tie and everything. But for those who are in the ground, it is risky work. They can die and it doesn’t matter; you have signed the contract.

Is it true that Tembagapura is an incredibly luxurious place, with a Sheraton hotel, golf course, helicopter pads and all this other stuff as well? It just seems really out of place.

Yes. Partly because, from that luxury world you can see its real owners walking round in traditional dress. I am from there, and when I see my people, just in the airport, it is very, very insulting and sad. They look down on us there—as if to say ‘Who are you?’ They will ask you if you go to Freeport the anniversary of the battle you are there, because you are disturbing the place. There are some families who we work for—I can call that a form of slavery actually. They just pay you back with rice. Because their reason is ‘You don’t have rice’, that’s the rationale. ‘You don’t have rice here, you don’t eat as much as we do, because we have companies and we have police and we can feed you—but you need to work here, cut the grass, clean the yards, the whole day you can work here, and do everything we want you to do, and then at the lunchtime come and have rice.’ That’s how we get paid.

But isn’t there plenty of food that you could grow anyway, or you could find in the forest? We have sweet potatoes, but not rice.

And rice is seen as better?

Yes. Yes, that’s what happens now. And local people see all this rice, that it makes these people rich, cars and everything. This is food for this class of people. It’s almost like it is power to have that sort of food.

Yes. Food is like identity who that person is. So that’s why they work there rather than eating the food from the jungle?

That’s right. Crazy isn’t it?! (Laughs.)

The OPM and Resistance to Indonesian Rule
We’ve been talking about things that are quite depressing and downright in a lot of ways, but from what I’ve heard, the West Papuan movement seems to be getting stronger Could you tell us a little bit about the OPM? Is it true that, as has been said: ‘We are all OPM. OPM is in the hearts and minds of every West Papuan’? I was also wondering what you could tell us about the OPM structure and how it operates as underground networks in the cities, and as guerrillas in the bush. What is the current state of play between the OPM and the Army? I saw there was a cease-fire between the Islanders and the OPM units in one part of the territory, so does that signify a certain change as well? Yes. The first question is about history, right? I think it was started from 1st December 65, where it was placed. And then I can say we are because we respected them. West Papuan OPM and West Papuan is the same. That from West Papua, we are just the same, even though in front of the government officials, people will say ‘I am not OPM, no.’ But if you go to them in their house, they will talk differently and cry in front of you that they are suffering because of their people, and that they feel ‘OPM is for us.’ We think getting a position in Indonesia is important—when we get a position we can talk, we can do something. We cannot say in front of the people, ‘I am against it, because we want to be in the government, and know more about what's happening in there, and then we can work for our people.

So there are people who are gaining influence or working undercover in the colonial power structure, but are there still people out in the jungle carrying out armed operations? Yes. Kelly Kwa, who took the hostages, is actually the regional commander in I-lepo-not’s area, he is responsible for the light against it, and there is another leader, Matthias Wena—he is commander in chief. And they are basically fighting for rights and survival and these issues we are talking about. About the ceasefire—actually that can happen because I am here. It has just happened because we understand more now how we can do that. OPM is the name of the armed force. OPM is the civil organization: just like Sinn Fein and IRA, it’s similar (laughs.). We are learning now what method the world will listen to us more.

We began the traditional way with fighting, but now let us have a ceasefire and then see who is actually killing the people. The army tells the local villagers, ‘That's because of the OPM.’ although actually, logically, this Indonesian army killed them, but they then point out, ‘OPM caused you to die, why do you want to agree with the OPM, let us join and light them?’

Do you get many takers for that? Do people actually believe it? Emotionally they say ‘We want to light’, but culturally they can’t; they know that we are fighting for them, not for our land, for our culture, for the survival of the community. They know this because we tell the stories to keep this culture widespread, for everybody. They will get the emotion for one, two days, because of the people dying, and the crying, and everything. They will say ‘Oh yes—OPM, that’s why we are being killed and we hate them.’ But then after some days, they rationalise what’s actually happening to them, and there are many stories…

This is like the storykeeper thing, it gets brought into the story cycle…

Where the men gather together and sleep in one house, they discuss broad topics, including this, and they have arguments, and they come out with conclusions. The Indonesians are manipulating the situation, actually the OPM are helping us, they are really fighting for us.

The 1984 attack on Jayapura [the West Papuan capital] backfired badly, and lots of the underground networks of OPM sympathisers had to flee from there. Did the OPM recover the strength in its underground networks?

Now we have problems in the bush, not in the city. The underground is now stronger. It has changed because Suharto has stepped down, and the underground is even more clear now we can’t stay underground anymore—it’s come above ground—now everybody is claiming, ‘I am for freedom, openness.’

What is the OPM vision for a free West Papua?

How would the people like to live free of the Indonesians? I assume that it would be independent of Papua New Guinea. PNG hasn’t had the occupation or anything like that, but does have serious problems, say with Bougainville, the illegal [and legal] logging, government corruption and so on. I was just wondering how you might manage to avoid repeating those mistakes. It would be great to have the Indonesians gone, but what follows?

We have been talking about this because this question came from many people. They say you want the Indonesians out, but you will still have another government. Government is the same, whatever government it is, they do the same thing.

There is that problem.

Yes. Because government want to always allow companies in, contracts, and mining companies. My view—and I think most of my people from the Highlands would agree with me—is to come back to the traditions, that’s what we would like to promote, where every tribe has its own leadership, it is government of and by the people. I have a book on government in Switzerland and it was a good example, how they made their country, where local leadership is strong, that's the most effective.

Post-Suharto, Indonesia is talking about devolving power more down to the local level, and bypassing the provincial level. How do you then avoid repeating the same old problems with corruption—call it at a new scale? It’s perhaps less of a problem in the traditional tribal set-up, but I can still see temptation, and grounds for corruption, especially if there is lots of money floating around on offers from the corporations and others. It’s a difficult question, I know, everybody wants to talk about this.

We are worrying now because we ourselves are talking—'OK, we want to light, but then after we get it, what would we do?' We will have another war between the tribes, between the government, and be just like PNG, because this is one island and this is going to be our problem as well. My tribe is the biggest tribe in the island, and people on the coast are thinking, ‘Oh, maybe this tribe will become authoritarian.’

Like situations you have in Nigeria, say, where one tribe monopolises government.

And this is one thing that is in the future, after I go back—we must sit and talk between the academics, between the politicians, among the West Papuans ourselves. We want to clarify this. set up this before.

Do the ordinary people have this same input into this sort of discussion process?

Our tribal leaders, particularly in this year now, are standing in front of the government saying that they want to defend us, which has not happened before, but now they are planning it: ‘I am tribal leader, I want my people free, free from you’, and I want that to go on, for them to speak for the people, not politicians, not educated people or whatever.

Do tribal leaders make the decisions for themselves, or with lots of input from the rest of the tribe—because I can see how they might not respect the wishes of the tribe as much as they should, not pay as much attention.

There is a problem in the kingdom system of leadership, mostly on the coast—they don’t care about people, but the people are still loyal to their king. But in the Highlands, they elect people based on what they do, and they can be set down in just a day. So they can be brought down in a day if they’ve become too powerful, so they’ve got to be quite careful!

They must do much consultation—they can’t force people to do things. If I were tribal leader, I must be convinced, I must have assurance, that my people will do what I’m saying. I must be sure that they are in agreement, and we have the proof in our tribal discussions and many consultations, and we have made up our minds in our men’s house, and I must go on people to that decision—and that means they will do it. We don’t say leader actually (laughs), in our language we say someone in front. “Leaders” here have agendas, and it is like they want to influence people for their agendas, but my father is a leader, and I know how he leads. I never see his agenda force others. He accommodates the agendas from people, he values, he collects agendas, and then examines him. He tells people: ‘Your idea is good, but I think this will happen, what do you think about this?’ I don’t know more about the kingdom system, but it’s more like top-down.

Women in the Struggle

This is another thorny subject, but when you talk about the men’s house, I wonder how much input the women have into the decision making process. Do women make their voice known as well? Now it is changing, but in general, women almost have no voice in government, in local, traditional government. They have their voice in some certain aspects, like regarding food, how we have guests, how to serve the guests, who will do what, who will contribute this food and on what day and these kinds of things—how to distribute foods when we have great feasts, how to divide the food into groups. In the case of food, delivery family business, women have power we listen to women, but not about the government, about lighting.

Is there any call from the women to have a greater say?

This week, for the first time they have a conference of women in West I-apa. Women who were raped, who were treated badly during the wars, when the army take them to their bars, and those women who have gathered together, now they are speaking out for themselves, saying ‘Now we want to be heard.’ It has happened from the last two years, when we had protest against the mining companies, when the president of Freeport came…

Jim Moffett, highly eccentric head of Freeport

Yes. Moffett came to the area, the men didn’t say anything to them, they told the women, ‘Go and tell him, because he is from a mother that’s why he is alive, he is Moffett because of his mother—and his mother is more important than his father based on our culture.'
You were saying that Jim Bob cried when he came to Freepo. I have to say that it’s not unknown for business leaders to be hypocritical and to cry what we call crocodile tears [by far the most likely explanation, given Freepo’s behaviour before and since the visit]—but people took that as a sincerer and meaningful thing, is that right? Yes, they did. Bob cried when Yosepha Kwalik, the woman who led the meeting, threw her noken [a woven bag in which Amungme women carry babies and pigeons] at him, and said ‘My son Moffett, in the past I put you inside my noken. I took you with me wherever I went, but I did not realise that you actually suck my blood until it’s all drained, and I remain only in bones without flesh. Now I pick you out of my noken and will throw you far away.’ She asked him to reconsider what he and his company have been doing.

And that was linked to the fact that for the first time women were spokespeople as opposed to the men being the representatives. People thought this was a breakthrough when they met Jim Bob, and this was partly linked with the fact that it was the women who had spoken to him. Yes. We thought women are talking for our people, which never happened before now and a lot of sympathy among our tribal people, that now it is women who are talking for us, and let us support it. And they didn’t mind that even though it had been perhaps against the previous customs? Culturally, they had no problem. The people supported her they say ‘Go woman, say more.’ That was the first historical step in that culture, where women can talk, and now women are feeling. ‘We can say something for the people now and this person cried because of us, which didn’t happen when men were talking to him. We changed him.’ The men agree, we can’t do that to that point. Only women can do that. Women have some abilities to do certain things, and that’s why we are saying ‘OK, you have done something, now go on, develop what you can do next.’

West Papua After Suharto—What does the Future Hold?
I was wondering if the prospects for West Papua have improved since the downfall of Suharto. There’s going to be hell to pay if independence for East Timor—is anything similar on the cards for West Papua? I know talks were planned for sometime this year. West Papua seems a lot stronger since the fall of Suharto—pro-Papuan demonstrations in Jakarta, a series of flag raisings across West Papua, and as you say, the spirit of independence is more widespread now.

I’ve just read emails from West Papua, reporting that the national dialogue with President Habibie and we will happen on 20th of February. They’re in Jayapura now and 70 people will fly out tomorrow to Java for that dialogue, led by Church leaders, who are playing very important roles now. They are saying ‘No more fake independence talks, just try to change the government. So it’s not a trickery. We want to let people say whatever they want, whether it is against, or for Indonesia, it doesn’t matter.’ What we want is that they talk for themselves—the Church for West Papua is saying ‘We are new Church, we work for the people, we help people to speak out for their own rights‘, so they have selected 70 people from the whole. I can say that this is the second Act of Free Choice.

Well, yes, that’s what I was afraid of in a way. And there is a tribal leader who was involved in the Act of Free Choice, he is now the leader of the West Papuan tribal council. This is Thesys Eluay, the guy who recently got arrested for discussing independence. Is he out of prison now? He can’t be kept in prison, because he has people—if he is imprisoned, thousands of people will come, so they can’t do anything to him.

So this is like a breakthrough, really—my impression is that it is starting to build up what you could call an irresistible momentum—the spirit was so strong, the momentum was so strong...

So strong. That it is going to be very difficult for Jakarta to sell them out.

Now Jakarta is offering autonomy and autonomy plus, as they call it—but people are saying ‘Not these two, we want independence, your agenda is yours, but this dialogue is from us, not the government agenda. We proposed, we initiated, we suggested and our government’s independence.’ So in these weeks, January 2nd, 2nd, 3rd, we saw, very clear they are open, people acclaim now ‘Yes, we want independence.’ They can be honest about it.

That’s great. Aren’t people still being repressed as well though? Isn’t it true that anybody who presses for independence will be punished, because it is a betrayal of Indonesia?

That can happen, for somebody. If I say that, it is easy for Indonesia to take me to prison, because I am nobody. I am not a tribal leader I have no people. That’s why we are saying... nobody can say this, just the tribal leaders can say this. Even the Governor is just saying ‘OK, we support national government policy’—he hasn’t got authority from the people, so if he is against, or for independence, he won’t have support.

But to an extent, the Indonesians have never had authority they just relied upon military might—so I’m not sure how it’s any different now. Because Indonesia has severe economic problems, and people are desperate for anything coming in from Hong Kong and elsewhere. I thought they’d also just announced a new 5 year plan for the transmigration programme—giving a strong incentive to keep West Papua down, under their thumb, and keep the money rolling in. I don’t mean to be pessimistic, but I can see how it might be business as usual. It is not easy for Jakarta to let us go, because we need Jakarta, that is what we say. If they lose us, it means Jakarta will have problems, especially in finances. So they have this strong demand for Independence building up in West Papua now after 35 years, and yet one of the reasons why they have been there all this time is because it is a huge money spinner—so they don’t want to sacrifice the money. I can see how they might try and manipulate the tribal leaders, and so forth.

Yes, that’s why the Church are promising that they are doing their best not to be tricked by the government. But we can’t totally believe it, because Indonesia is there in power. What I personally believe is that Thesys Eluay cannot be influenced by whoever he has his own position already clearly stated in front of the government: there are 70 people, but only one person himself; our hope is in him.

How open are the discussions going to be? Are people back in West Papua going to know what’s going on or will it be behind closed doors?

It has been a long story about the Act of Free Choice. We were saying ‘Well tell us what will happen’—which was that we were blaming each other. My people are blaming my father, he did something wrong, and we don’t want that to be repeated again, because it disturbed our culture relationship. So now we want to open, we want to be transparent, we want the 70 to be more responsible to us, because... Habibie [Suharto’s replacement] has talked of independence for East Timor—is anything similar on the cards for West Papua? I know talks were planned for sometime this year. West Papua seems a lot stronger since the fall of Suharto—pro-Papuan demonstrations in Jakarta, a series of flag raisings across West Papua, and as you say, the spirit of independence is more widespread now.

I’ve just read emails from West Papua, reporting that the national dialogue with President Habibie and we will happen on 20th of February. They’re in Jayapura now and 70 people will fly out tomorrow to Java for that dialogue, led by Church leaders, who are playing very important roles now. They are saying ‘No more fake independence talks, just try to change the government. So it’s not a trickery. We want to let people say whatever they want, whether it is against, or for Indonesia, it doesn’t matter.’ What we want is that they talk for themselves—the Church for West Papua is saying ‘We are new Church, we work for the people, we help people to speak out for their own rights‘, so they have selected 70 people from the whole. I can say that this is the second Act of Free Choice.

Well, yes, that’s what I was afraid of in a way. And there is a tribal leader who was involved in the Act of Free Choice, he is now the leader of the West Papuan tribal council. This is Thesys Eluay, the guy who recently got arrested for discussing independence. Is he out of prison now?

He can’t be kept in prison, because he has people—if he is imprisoned, thousands of people will come, so they can’t do anything to him.

So this is like a breakthrough, really—my impression is that it is starting to build up what you could call an irresistible momentum—the spirit was so strong, the momentum was so strong...

So strong. That it is going to be very difficult for Jakarta to sell them out.

Now Jakarta is offering autonomy and autonomy plus, as they call it—but people are saying ‘Not these two, we want independence, your agenda is yours, but this dialogue is from us, not the government agenda. We proposed, we initiated, we suggested and our government’s independence.’ So in these weeks, January 2nd, 2nd, 3rd, we saw, very clear they are open, people acclaim now ‘Yes, we want independence.’ They can be honest about it.

That’s great. Aren’t people still being repressed as well though? Isn’t it true that anybody who presses for independence will be punished, because it is a betrayal of Indonesia?

That can happen, for somebody. If I say that, it is easy for Indonesia to take me to prison, because I am nobody. I am not a tribal leader I have no people. You don’t have to be mad to work here... Jim Moffett’s pearls of wisdom: “We are thrusting a spear of economic development into the heartland of Irian Jaya... We’re going to mine all the way to New Orleans... This is not a job for us, it’s a religion.”

Sorry explain that, I suspect that’s an important, subtle point...

Like, if my father and my mother give me advice which is contradictory. I will prefer to listen to my mother culturally.

That seems strange to me—the women traditionally have had less input into decision making because their domain is the family, but you, a man, will listen more to your mother than to your father. It seems slightly paradoxical...

Yes, yes. (Much merriment.) In public decision making, gathering opinions, the men are allowed, not women—but these leaders, if they still have their mothers alive, they go and see them for advice. If I tell you the value of advice, actually the mothers have more influence—and the wives also have influence but not as much.
Mr Mysterious X-Tremist: Wouldn’t ecotourism destroy your culture? The demands that the tourists put, they would want, they’d want someone to clean the floor—they wouldn’t be happy to live the same way as you do.

Yes, it’s difficult.

What can we do in support of people in West Papua here in the UK, to force Indonesia to stop their abuses, to increase the demand for independence?

Yes, one thing is finding out actually what happened with Freeport, the early process, because politicians say ‘Where’s the proof?’ So it is nonsense. We don’t have the knowledge of English, or of how to deal with this modern world, but we know there was something wrong between Indonesia and Freeport and US and Dutch. But how can we claim this, how can we go back to the 1960s and prove that this was wrong, that’s one main problem. The second is what made the Dutch allow Indonesia to take our land without our agreement—only of the 1025 (in the Act of Free Choice).

Do you think we should put pressure on companies like RZ, or the Indonesian embassy or whatever to force them to change?

Yes. We are speaking out for this. Some people are saying that it is the arms who are killing people, not the companies—and Freeport, for instance, are not even in any human rights violations by arguing that it is here for business, not for killing people, animals and plans.

This is a crazy answer—the Indonesians kill us because they want to secure the mining. Without the companies and the mining there will be nothing anymore, as simple as that. It’s not all by proxy either—Freeport’s security guards have so had direct involvement in various incidents.

Indonesia and the companies will respond to pressure—it is clear they are guilty—but now we are trying to find out how to influence, and which angle we can use to put pressure on them. Finally because we don’t know how to, as we say, we are acting more and more in all ways—and we need people to tell us this is the way the British Government will listen to you. or this is the way that America will do something for you, and we want to listen to these ideas. It’s one of the purposes of my mission that I’m bringing here—because my belief is that the traditions are very strong, we’re not in—just like the telephone line, communicating between you and here, to the speakers of the people: the tribal leaders. When I go back, I will be back then. I won’t speak in front.

Update

The National Dialogue initiated in February is so far proceeding without too much trouble—certainly when compared to the rampant death squad persecution in the run-up to the upcoming referendum in East Timor: Tribal leaders are sticking to the demands for complete independence, and information posts have been set up around the country—particularly in the towns—to publicise the process. Worryingly however there are reports of police and army repression of a flag raising ceremony in Sorong on 5th July. 440 soldiers opened fire on the crowd, killing an unknown number seriously injuring many and detaining up to 140 people. The city was put under strict control after the massacre, with a curfew imposed, all shops closed and searches underway for OPM suspects. Elsewhere in West Papua the army is threatening to close down the information posts even though they are clearly a significant part of the Dialogue. Nonetheless, a representative of the OPM summed up the current mood as follows: “Before, the hope for freedom in West Papua was regarded as just a dream that hardly ever becomes a reality or as something in the air that we cannot grasp. But the national dialogue has given this dream an unforgettable moment in our history: the time when the Indonesian President listened to our demand to regain our robbed independence. Both sides must now go away and think it through—and we are thinking about it by establishing the posts that help all West Papuans to think about it, not just our national representatives. By doing this we have reclaimed independence—it is already in our hands, no longer just in the air. Now the President must decide when to give it to us, and it is our hope that the world will approve it—without a repetition of the act of no choice of 1969.”

[Many thanks to Da Duchess, for Dancing With Dictators above and beyond the call of duty.]

Resources

“West Papua: The Obliteration of a People” Carmel Budiardjo and Lani Naya Long (TAPOL, 1990). (A superb introduction to the subject—upsetting and engrossing.)

“Poisoned Arrows—An Investigative Journey Through Indonesia”, George Monbiot (Michael Joseph 1990). (Good first person account—often hilarious descriptions of our Guide’s hilarious adventures in a tropical clime.)

Indonesia’s Secret War: The Guerrilla Struggle in Irian Jaya”, Robin Oobin (Allan & Unwin 1985).

Contacts

DOWN TO EARTH
59 Aldersham Rd
London SE13 5EN
Tel: 0171-738 6089.
E: dire@jockey.org
(Excellent organisation—produce newsletter with a good overview of Indonesian environmental/social justice issues. Subscriptions around £1 a year.)

PARISANS
41a Thornhill Square
London N1 1BE
Tel: 0171-730 6395
(Impeccable enemies of Rio Tinto zinc mining corporation—campaigning on Indonesian human rights and RZ interests—50%)

INAUC PEOPLES FOUNDATION
Otta Simpaean
P.O. Box 545
6700 AM Wageningen
Netherlands
E: simpaean@netscape.net

Pavo
P.O. Box 801
3500 AV Utrecht
Netherlands
Tel: 31.30.276 30 88
E: pavo@tom.nl

OPM Support Group
opmg@info-action.org

Do or Die—voices from the ecological resistance No. 8
OPM Resistance to Indonesian Rule

1st May 1963: West Papua (now the province of Irian Jaya) passes from Dutch to Indonesian control, on the condition that the Indonesians hold a referendum to decide the ultimate status of the territory within 6 years.

26th July 1965: The ‘Kobar Incident’—the first outbreak of hostilities, as Papuan forestry and agriculture department employees kill Indonesian troops, seize weapons and flee into the bush.

January 1967: A rebellion in Merauke in the southeast of the country is followed by an uprising of 14,000 members of the Arfak tribe in Manokwari, which is declared a ‘Free Papua State’. Strafing and bombing continues by the Indonesians as part of “Operation Annihilation” [1] kills 3,500 villagers. Other groups spring up in Jayapura (the capital), Sorong, Kaimana and FakFak.

February 1969: Uprising at Enamotai, Wessel Lakes/Fanari region in the Central Highlands, in the run-up to the “Act of Free Choice”. Unrest prompted at least partly by demands for the withdrawal of Indonesian troops, to make a ‘free choice’ possible. Defeating Papuan police reinforce local people and all Indonesians flee the area. Wooden stakes are driven into the dirt, making them unuseable.

October 1971: As violence continues, the OPM proclaims an independent West Papua. The new constitution is distributed throughout the country.

1975: Papuan oil workers rebel at Ayamur, Sorong, attacking and beating Indonesian and western managers after an order to replace native employees with Indonesians. (Pertamina—the state-run national oil company—has a policy of not employing Melanesians.)

1977: Indonesians attempt to eliminate OPM bases near the border with Papua New Guinea (PNG), with 10,000 troops and aerial bombardment. Up to 5000 people killed in this offensive.

April 1977: Many attacks on government posts by the Dani of the Bismarck Island/Central Highlands, lasting until July. Some involve thousands of people, armed primarily with bows, arrows and spears. Landing strips sabotaged again.

Indonesians respond with large-scale strafing and bombing, including the use of napalm. Kompass newspaper says “the Bismarck River was so full of corpses that for a month and a half, many people could not bring themselves to eat fish.”

July 1977: National Indonesian elections. Reluctance to participate is so widespread in West Papua that they had to be postponed, and in some areas abandoned altogether.

July 1977: Ammogme protesters at the unilateral expropriation [ie, theft] of 10,000 hectares of their hunting ground for an expansion of Firepower’s Grasberg mine. The pipeline transporting copper and gold from the mine to the harbour at Timika is blown up, along with a bridge and oil storage tanks. Freepot loses several million dollars a day for some months. [Ahh... Retaliatory strafing by US-supplied Bronco counter-insurgency aircraft kills 3,000; Bronco’s being used in East Timor at the same time for similar purposes.]

Indonesians begin to use chemical weapons against this time.

May 1978: OPM ambush helicopter and capture 7 high-rank Indonesian officers and civilian officials abroad, later released for weapons and supplies.

Bronco bombing raids on villages on both sides of the border with Papua New Guinea cause at least 1500 refugees to flee into PNG.

October 1978: Second OPM kidnap—some more junior officers caught this time. The sinister: Orwellian-sounding “smiling policy” launched by the OPM (‘teritorial smiling’ was also pursued in East Timor) is a ‘winning hearts and minds’-style counter-insurgency strategy to detach people from OPM influence.

1980: “Operation Clean Sweep” targets the border area, killing over 1000 in June alone; Javanese are later settled here in several showpiece transmigration sites on ‘cleared’ land. Clean sweep slogan: “Let the rats and cockroaches into the jungle, so that the chickens can breed in the coop.”

August 1980: 6 women unseat the West Papuan ‘Morning Star’ flag in the forefront of the Governor’s office, Jayapura. Arrested on the spot, brutally treated and raped. (There is a widely held belief that if the flag can be kept aloft continuously for 24 hours, it will unleash forces capable of driving out the foreign intruder.)

Late 1981: After Dutch TV crew films hundreds of OPM supporters in the Wessel Lakes area shooting anti-Indonesian slogans, heavy bombing and chemical weapons kill between 2,500 and 13,000 people.

October 1981: OPM assault on Ahepera Prison on the outskirts of Jayapura, in an attempt to free political prisoners. Attack on large transmigration site at Cenaym and kidnaping of 38 hostages from Holtekang logging camp—they are held until June 1982. Many OPM suspects are murdered and their heads impaled as a warning.

July 1982: 9 students replace the Indonesian with the Papuan flag outside the provincial assembly building in Jayapura and proclaim a West Papuan state. Four receive 10 year sentences, three 7 years and two 4 years.

Early 1983: Violence breaks out at Pertamina and Cenoco’s Inawatan oil exploration site, south of Sorong in the Bird’s Head peninsula. A local guide is killed and a French oilman seriously wounded after the companies ignore requests for compensation for loss of many sago food trees. More unrest follows as local people hear about the stingy compensation that is finally offered. (As of 1988, even this hasn’t been paid.)

2nd November 1983: Respected Papuan anthropologist, museum curator and folk singer Arnold Ap arrested for ‘subversion’. Held until 21st April 1984, after which he was killed—probably by Indonesian soldiers—in an extremely suspect ‘escape attempt’. His death sends shockwaves throughout West Papua and beyond.

6th February 1984: 150 OPM sympathisers serving in the Indonesian army desert to the notorious Har Gunung military base near Jayapura; they sack the battalion arms depot and flee to PNG.

13th February 1984: Abortive attack on Jayapura—planned for months, and intended to target the airport, harbour electricity supplies, fuel dumps and army installations, and to release all political prisoners. But Indonesian intelligence gets wind of the plans. Some actions take place: and a massive crackdown is unleashed, with house to house searches and mass arrests decimating OPM support in Jayapura, a former stronghold. By June more than 10,000 people have fled across the border into PNG.

March 1984: OPM ambush light aircraft at Yuruf border post. Its Swiss pilot is later released after international pressure, while 2 Indonesian passengers are killed on the spot.
November 1984: Refugees facing forced repatriation from PNG back to Irian Jaya (and possible arrest or murder) are subjected to visits from an Indonesian verification team, including Irian's deputy-governor. At the large Blackwater refugee camp the team is humiliated, and greeted with a hail of missiles that forces them to run for their lives. [Ha ha!]

January 1986: Unrest is organized to coincide with preparations for the April 1987 Indonesian elections. 900 OPM fighters occupy the important Waisis border post near Jayapura for two weeks. The Morning Star flag is unfurled and bridges and roads into the area destroyed, preventing recapture. Bulldozers being used to build the Trans-Irian Highway are blown up, halting work. The Morning Star flag is raised twice in Jayapura.

11th March 1986: Shell installation in Podena is attacked, 50 workers and 16 policemen captured. April 1986: 3 Indonesian soldiers and 3 Pertamina officials killed at Sarmi. Shell had been carrying out seismic studies in this region for several years, but these attacks forced it to abandon all exploratory activities. There are also raids on police posts in Arso and Aepura at the same time.

August 1986: Indonesian launch “Operation Skewed Meat”, deploying 4000 soldiers to wipe out the OPM. The bombing of Highland villages sends another 4000 refugees into PNG.

March 1987: Territorial friction between Papuans and transmigrants boils over into an attack on a transmigration site by 200 Papuans armed with machetes, killing 12 and wounding 17.

March-June 1988: Intense fighting between the army and OPM west of Jayapura and in the Highlands leaves 150 dead from both sides.

14th December 1988: Dr. Thomas Wainggai, along with a crowd of 100, lowers the Indonesian flag and raises the Morning Star in Jayapura. 37 are arrested and 2000 try to attend the May 1989 trial, which is moved to military premises; Wainggai is sentenced to 20 years.

January 8th 1996: OPM takes 26 hostages—connected with WWF surveys for the proposed Lorentz National Park—from a village near the Freeport mine. 15 of them are released by March. The army catches up with them on May 15th—at least 8 OPM fighters die, and 2 of the hostages are mysteriously killed. Many army abuses during the search for the hostages, and serious reprisals afterwards.

March 1989: Thousands of people (including Papuan Freeport employees) riot in Freeport's Tembagapura town, after a Dani tribeman is run down by a Freeport vehicle and his body dumped in a ravine. Many company facilities are destroyed or damaged, along with the government relations office, the shopping mall and other buildings—the airport is also attacked. 6000 march south to Timika and two other company towns (one newly built) on the 3rd day wreaking more havoc. The mine is closed for two days, and one tribal leader describes the riots as “a war on Freeport and the government”. [Sounds good to me!]

March 20th 1996: Riots in Abeapura, following Dr. Wainggai’s death in prison. Government buildings are attacked, vehicles burned and Abeapura market (where transmigration site produce is sold) is burnt down. 4 dead, many injured, many arrested.

Early July 1996: Thousands of protestors burn down government buildings in Nabire: the district heads office, the court, the transmigration and education office and the bank. Attempts to destroy a Pertamina oil depot are foiled by troops. 60 prisoners are freed from the local prison. Apparently the riots are triggered by a decision to recruit for local administration jobs from all over West Papua and from Indonesia.

August 14th 1996: OPM kidnap 14 employees of the Dianjanti logging company near Timika. 2 are found dead in September—the rest escaped or had been released. The army orders all companies operating in the Timika area to accept their protection or shut down.

July 1998: After Suharto is tragically deposed, thousands of students in Biak, Sorong, Jayapura and Manokwari demonstrate for an end to Indonesian rule, and raise the Morning Star flag. They are fired on with rubber and live bullets and dozens are detained. On the island of Biak an unknown number are massacred after a five day long flag-raising rebellion—gunned down while still asleep in a pre-dawn raid. Others are rounded up in house to house searches, with some (including children) taken out to sea and dumped overboard while still alive.

August 1998: Unprecedented, all-out 4 day strike of 5000 workers at the Grasberg mine, over broken promises on wage increases. Production is stopped.

16

Do or Die—Voices from the ecological resistance No. 8